The AFLA SALON FOR NEW VOICES is a forum for individuals & organizations whose unique visions deserve wider public consideration. This year we focus on the idea of social justice and its interplay in the fields of art & design.

Mark Steven Greenfield is an LA-based visual artist. His work deals with issues of race and identity and is exhibited throughout the United States and abroad. Mr. Greenfield will be talking about the controversy his and other socially charged work stir up in the public forum and the pressure of self-censorship. Mr. Greenfield’s background includes the Directorship of the Watts Towers of Simon Rodia from 1993 to 2002. In 1997, he joined the faculty at Los Angeles City College where he teaches course work in Drawing, Design and Art History. Mr. Greenfield has served on the boards of the Downtown Arts Development Association, the Korean American Museum and was past president of the Los Angeles Art Association. Presently Mr. Greenfield is director of the Los Angeles Municipal Art Gallery for the Department of Cultural Affairs. Learn more about Mark Steven Greenfield at www.markstevengreenfield.com.
